Ine, saum s outline of microeconomics free download free ютюб фейсбук.Q: using constants after a chain of if.. else statements, but i only want to call one method I am using Python 3.7, and I have a method called method_a and method_b which are at the end of a chain of if.. else statements. The problem is that calling method_a requires a lot of stuff to happen. In my case, the if.. else statements deal with the fact that I am using a method called method_x, which has two parameters. method_x(a, b) = c. So I will have: if x == A: #do_stuff elif x == B: #do_other_stuff if x == C: #other_stuff And then I have method_a and method_b, which has many more parameters. My problem is that I really dont want to write the big methods just to check if x == A. I would rather have a method like this, which will give me the right constants, but will not execute all of the code of method_a. def method_c(x, a, b): y = c return y if x == A: #do_stuff elif x == B: #do_other_stuff if x == C: #other_stuff def method_a(a, b, y): return a def method_b(a, b, y): return b So the results will be the same as before, but i only want to write the bigger method once. Obviously I can rewrite my if.. else statements in such a way that I have if x == A: if a == 04aeff104c
