Do they need the bag, and if so why. I don't see a hole that is accessible for me to put a bag in. It would seem to me that a plastic bag in the middle would be as good as a cardboard box. The one on the right does not have a bag. They put a bag in the bag (the inside plastic bag) which holds the garbage in. They have a metal garbage can which is on wheels, and a larger garbage can which is stationary on the ground. A garbage can needs something to hold the waste in, otherwise it will fly all over the place. The bag is the preferred option because it is eco friendly, and keeps the waste from blowing all over the place. The can is the preferred option because it is a stationary unit that is heavy enough to hold weight. It is also safer because it is on the ground. The bags don't hold the garbage in, they hold the garbage IN the bag. Some bags are reusable, and others are not. I wouldn't worry about putting a bag into your garbage can. Some food cans have big plastic trays inside the can that you can place a bag in and then they will close over the bag so you can see that the bag is closed. They usually come with the bag already cut to the size that it fits into the can. I would use the bag-in-a-bag solution. It's the most logical solution. The garbage bag will protect your floor and the contents of your can will be kept in one place. Quote: Originally Posted by krimpse
