Induction of gene expression by flavonoids. Flavonoids are a diverse group of naturally occurring low molecular weight polyphenolic compounds which are widely distributed in fruits, vegetables and certain medicinal herbs. Although flavonoids have been known to possess a variety of biological activities, including antioxidant, anti-inflammatory, anti-allergic, anti-thrombotic and anti-carcinogenic properties, the precise mechanisms by which these flavonoids exert these effects remain unclear. Various studies suggest that a common effector for the biological activities of flavonoids is the activation of cell-surface receptors called 'transcription factor-like-genes' (TLRs). TLRs play an essential role in the innate immune response by recognizing a wide spectrum of microbial components and activating a series of immune and inflammatory responses. TLRs, therefore, are important
