The film's character designer Toshiaki Matsuura, who also serves as the animation director, had previously announced on Friday that he would handle directing duties on the film. The film is the second entry in the Promare trilogy, which began in 1994 with the film "Promare no Lion" and continued in 2000 with "Promare no Minotaur." The Promare trilogy focuses on a school for young rangers, from which the main protagonist goes on a journey to learn his identity. When the film was announced in 2012, the project was described as a cross-media project that would also include a live-action film and an original TV anime adaptation. The film's original script was written by the "Bonanza" writer Kentaro Takekuma. Masanobu Hoshino, who also wrote "The Idolmaster" anime, is adapting the script for animation. Takahiro Kawai will direct the project at Polygon Pictures, while Toshiaki Matsuura will also direct the animation. Makoto Ono, the CG supervisor for the "Gurren Lagann" anime, is directing the CGI animation. The staff of the film includes both Japanese and overseas animators. The overseas animators include animators from the USA, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. Polygon Pictures and Polygon Pictures USA are co-producing the project. Production I.G, AIC, Tsuburaya Productions, Satelight, Nippon Television, Skydance Productions, and Polygon Pictures USA also provided animation support. This material can include for example solid waste, food waste, water, steam condensate, and air. Where these materials are valuable, efforts have been made to reclaim them in some manner. For example, in the case of solid waste, techniques have been developed to remove such materials from industrial waste streams and reclaim them as fuel. While these techniques are beneficial, they are not always successful, and in any event, are relatively expensive and inefficient. In the area of treating water, such as water from cooling towers and the like, a great deal of effort has been expended in developing techniques to treat such waters to remove impurities, particularly metal impurities. In the area of treating waste gases, including for example steam condensate from industrial and other installations and the like, efforts have been made to treat such gases to reduce or remove corrosive constituents, such as chlorine, from the gases.
