To study the deletion of cytotoxic T lymphocyte (CTL) epitopes during mammalian infection, we determined the immunodominant T-cell epitopes of Eimeria maxima in BALB/c mice and their disappearance during infection. E. maxima glyceraldehyde-3-phosphate dehydrogenase (gpd) was used as a major immunogen to induce a protective immune response. Epitopes were divided into five regions by amino acid sequence similarity to known T-cell epitopes and used to represent immunodominant regions. BALB/c mice were immunized with gpd and were subsequently infected with E. maxima. Immunodominant region 1 (residues 48-81) was deleted rapidly from the g7 (Glu-Asp-Asp) subregion in the secondary infection. This observation suggests that the deletion of immunodominant region 1 can be attributed to the continuous T-cell stimulation in vivo.Molecular Mechanisms of Hyperlipidemia and Atherosclerosis. The levels of lipid are an important risk factor for cardiovascular disease. However, the exact molecular mechanisms of lipid metabolism remain uncertain. In this chapter, we describe our view on the mechanisms of hyperlipidemia and atherosclerosis, with the focus on identifying the molecular linkages between the high lipid-induced inflammatory responses and atherosclerosis. In particular, we emphasize the importance of examining the effect of cholesterol-lowering treatments on inflammatory responses.// Copyright (c) 2012 Ecma International.
