Mass panic incidents are common public health threats in developed nations in recent years. The aim of this study was to identify the level of risk of smoke inhalation illness in a group of people exposed to smoke during a mass panic event. A cross-sectional survey was administered to a convenience sample of people who took refuge during a mass panic event. A total of 102 of the 103 participants completed the survey (99%). Participants in this survey were more likely to have symptoms of smoke inhalation illness, including cough, dizziness, dizziness, and headache, when compared with a control group. With the exception of heartburn, no statistically significant association was found between the presence of a specific symptom and length of stay in the smoke ( $r(2) = 0.13$  for cough). In multivariate analysis, persons with complaints of headache (odds ratio [OR], 4.8; 95% confidence interval [CI], 1.7-14) or dizziness (OR, 3.1; 95% CI, 1.2-8.0) were more likely to stay in the smoke longer than were persons without these complaints. Mass panic events pose a serious risk of smoke inhalation illness to the entire population involved. These events are likely to have long-lasting physical and psychological consequences, particularly for the subgroup of individuals at greatest risk of smoke inhalation illness.

The trial has taken longer than expected because Hogan's lawyers, Robert Ray and Tony Serra, and the prosecutors, Stuart Richman and Kevin James, have battled over everything from how to define spam to which parts of the law the jury should be
